interest. You see that the old fellow is as full of fire as when, while a callow midshipman, he shocked the etiquette of the Admiralty by his vigorous efforts to get himself attached to the ill-starred expedition of Sir John Franklin, mainly induced thereto, in all probability, by true British obstinacy, the authorities having prohibited midshipmen as too young and undeveloped physically to endure the harships of Arctic service. "The Admiral plants himself on the Divine command to subdue and re-plenish the earth, and finds no scriptural warrant for exempting any part of the globe from its operation. He refers to the spirit of enterprise innate in the breast of man, particularly in those races which have pushed themselves to the forefront of human power and progress, and seems to imply that, if this spirit cannot find outlets as legitimate. spirit cannot find outlets as legitimate those of polar research, it will waste itself on enterprises even less hopeful and invigorating. He says that of all forms of sea service that in high lati-tudes is attended with the least loss of four centuries of Arctic exploration is smaller than that of many a single action, not rising above the dignity of a skirmish, in modern warfare.

EXAMPLES OF TAXABLES OF TAX

"He thinks that, with the example before us of what the daring and foresight of Columbus, the Cabots, Car-tier, Frobisher, Gilbert, Davis, Hud-son, Baffin, and other early explorers have accomplished for North America, it would be degenerate in the men of the present day, with their enormous resources in accumulated experience and scientific appliances for work and life in the polar regions, to shrink from completing the small remainder of what has to be done to compel the very pele itself to give up its secret. Re-ferring to his own long and arduous service as an Arctic explorer, he de-clares that if anything were needed to crown his already replete satisfaction it is supplied by the generous act of Lieutenant Greely in perpetuating his name and memory in Bedford Pim Island. "The Admiral is warm in praise of enthusiasm and achievements of Lieutenants Ray and Schwatka and Commander Schley. He promises great welcome to Greely, and has only a shade of anxiety about the future, lest it be reserved to America instead of England to complete the great work and vindicate all that has been and shall and vindrate all that has been avigation safe and—with true Anglo-Saxon utilitarianism—profitable. He speaks of the expected Hudson Bay cattle route as an example of the commercial value of exploring expeditions in developing new fields of enterprise, and, looking at the subject from a professional standpoint, declares that polar research is worth all that it has cost as a training school for the navies of Europe and

or two ago came to Saybrook to practice his profession.

It appears that between the two the most bitter feeling existed, which was originally caused by the settlement of some professional matter, which Barton claimed did him considerable injustice.
This morning, while Dr. Harris was standing in front of a drugstore, he heard his name mentioned in a rather heard his name mentioned in a rather derogatory and unprofessional manner by Dr. Barton, who was conversing with a friend. He at once stepped up and desired to know what the former lodged in jail.

In an interview this evening Dr. Harris exhibited great command of his feelings, but was evidently suppressing emotion. He freely related the story of the killing, stating that he told Dr. Barton he was a liar, whereupon Barton struck and knocked him down. As he arose, Harris says, he must have fired the fatal shot, for after the blow he remembered nothing for a few mo-ments. His first feeling was that he was sorry for the deed, and he said to the wounded man: "God knows, Doctor, I am sorry I hurt you. I did not mean it." He then opened Barton's clothing, and was examining the wound when arrested.

The excitement at Saybrook is in tense, and it is said that if Harris had not been removed from the town he would have been lynched.

A hasty excase in the Municipal Court this morning. Yesterday afternoon, while the Rev. Mr. Davis and others were helding a service on the Common, a man took exceptions to some of the remarks made and began to dispute the correctness of the preacher's riews. Although the man, whose name was Michael Powderly, ascened entirely unconscious of creating a disturbance, his argument attracted the attention of Officer Malcomb, who, at the request of the preacher, took the arguer in charge.

Powderly, in his defence, said he had just reached this city from Ireland, and visited the Common yesterday afternoon, and saw the company assembled. He heard the speaker give his views and call upon others to speak. As the meeting was being held on public ground he thought he had a right to say something. Accordingly he defended his own creed against what he thought the disparaging remarks of the other.

Judge Parmenter said: "Although the parties preaching had obtained no permit from the city government, they nevertheless constituted a religious assembly and should be protected. There was evidently no malicious attempt on the defendant's part to disturb the meeting, yet according to the interpretation of the law he was guilty." A fine of $3, without costs, was imposed, which was paid by the complainant, the Refinery, at the foot of Monroe street, exploded at 12 o'clock to-day. The concession shook the whole city. At one time it was feared the whole of the large oil-works would hundred.

The examination has developed an enormous deficiency. It certainly is $228,000, and is probably greater. It is in the accounts of depositors, and was caused by omissions to enter dividends and failures to account for the full amount of deposits, and by the carrying forward of larger amounts as payments than were actually made. Acting upon the information disclessed by the examination of the accounts and at the request of the Bank Commissioners, Attorney-General Sherman laid the case before Judge Allen, of the Supreme Judicial Court. The case was set down for hearing on October 27th, when the affairs of the bank will be fully entitled in court and the expert will undoubtedly show the exact condition of affairs as they were left by the treasurer.

ALEXANDER, OF BULGARIA.

ketch of His Coreer-Hits Military Ser Prince Alexander, of Bulgaria, who has suddenly been called into world-wide prominence by the Roumelian revolution, was known before his elevation as Prince Alexander Joseph, of Battenberg. He was born April 5, 1857, the son of Prince Alexander Louis George Frederic Emile, of Hesse, and the eldest brother of Prince Henry, of Battenberg, recently many Henry, of Battenberg, recently married to the Princess Beatrice, England. For several years, be-ginning in 1870, he was an officer in the German army. In 1877 he enter-ed the army of Russia. He accompanied the Russian headquarters in the last war between Turkey and Russia from the opening of the campaign to the fall of Plevna. After this event he was absent from the army several weeks, but recrossed the Danube in January, 1878, and rejoined the Grand Duke Nicholas at Adrianople soon afterwards. He was a favorite officer, good-natured, and ready to oblige on all occasions.

On April 29, 1879, he was elected Prince of Bulgaria by a unanimous vote of the Constituent Assembly of Bulgaria. He assumed the Government June 28, 1879. But for a disposition which appears to be extravagant in the eyes of his thrifty subjects, he enjoys great popularity.

He looks every inch a prince, is over six feet high, straight as an arrow, and possesses a fine commanding figure. Whether on foot or in the saddle his soldierly bearing is remarkable. His face is dark, so are his hair and eyes; his features are regular. He cultivates a moustache or a full beard as his preference dictates. The Prince is very fond of horseback exercise. His reading is chiefly confined to works on military subjects. He enjoys the use of a civil list worth about a hundred and twenty thousand dollars a year, with the maintenance of a palace at Sofia. Late events will probably serve to better
